INTRODUCTION.

The period covered by this volume of Early Records, which for reasons that must be obvious has been styled "Manchester" instead of "Derryfield," presents many features of interest. During this interval of sixteen years we see more clearly than heretofore the yielding of old ideas and principles to the ever-changing influences of progress. We begin to realize the touch of that power which was to build the future city.

In 1803 the first vote was taken relative to securing females for teachers, but it was not considered advisable. Post guides or sign boards were first mentioned at this time.

In 1804 the town voted to have a singing school, but raised no money towards its support.

The year 1805 marks the agitation of separating the church from town affairs, and no money was voted at the annual meeting for preaching, but two men were elected to sing in meeting. The following years money was raised until 1813, when the list of taxes was made up without the customary "minister's tax." After this the matter was discussed more forcibly, and in 1816 no money was voted for preaching.

In 1806 the town was divided into eight highway districts.

May 1, 1807, is a memorable date in the history of Manchester, as it witnessed the opening of the Blodget canal around Amoskeag Falls. This important event marked the accomplishment of the greatest engineering feat, considering the time, experience and available means, that has been effected in New England. The fulfillment of this dream of its projector and builder, Hon. Samuel Blodget, after thirteen years of anxious toil, the expenditure of a large personal estate and considerable sums of public funds, was the beginning of a new era for the town upon the banks of the Merrimack. In 1814 the first boat came up the river, and from that day began this industry of boating, and the traffic increased in volume and importance until the Merrimack became the greatest maritime highway in New England.

In 1808 the first public action was taken in regard to protection from fires, when "firewards" were chosen. That year also marks the beginning of the use of a new material in building, and surveyors of brick were chosen.

Another important event in this period was in 1810, when Thomas Stickney, grandson of Hon. Samuel Blodget, started the first manufacturing in this vicinity otherwise than saw mills.

In June a petition was sent to the state legislature to have the name of the town changed to "Manchester" out of respect to the suggestion of Judge Blodget, who had predicted that it would eventually become a rival to the city by that name in England.

This year the first "Clerk of the Market" was chosen. Overseers of the poor were first chosen at this meeting also.

In 1811 a petition to allow the town separate representation was made and granted.

That echo of the Revolution, the War of 1812, occurred during this period, Manchester doing her part, though as yet I have been unable to find the roll of her soldiers.

March 8, 1814, it was first voted to open town meeting with prayer. The fishing interests continued to be an important question to settle at town meetings and fishwards were chosen during the entire period.

In 1800 the state tax was $59.13; county tax, $12.95; town tax, $180.47. In 1816 these taxes were respectively $92.80, $44.34, $299.23.

* At the June session of the legislature this petition was received and the request granted. The new name was taken out of respect to the prediction of the late Judge Samuel Blodget, who had declared that here was to come into existence a city to rival that noted manufacturing town by the name in England. A factory had already been built, though the population of the town at this time was only six hundred and fifteen. Thomas Stickney, who was prominent in the change of the name, and in the affairs of that day, was a grandson of Judge Blodget, and lived at the old Blodget homestead.—EDITOR.

INDEX.

INDEX OF NAMES OF PERSONS.

It is not claimed that the following Personal Index is free from errors, as the compiler has found it impossible always to separate certain names from others, and to place all persons just where they belong. This has been mainly due to the loose manner of using the term "Junior," where two or more generations bore the same patronymic. In the majority of cases the son ceased to retain the suffix that was in reality a part of his name, and which some law should compel a son to retain during life. The places where mistakes have most likely occurred have been with the Halls and Haseltines. There is likely a mix-up with Philip Haseltine, Jr., and Joiner. It is believed the Starks have been given proper relations. The spelling of names without rule or license has also given cause for confusion.—EDITOR.
